

← BEER STYLE GUIDE →

All beer can be divided into two categories: ales and lagers. There are then numerous subcategories of different "styles" that fall under both.

Ale

Ales are top-fermented beers that are brewed at warmer temperatures. They tend to be fairly complex and flavorful with fruit and/or floral tones. Most ales are full-bodied and rich in taste.

Lager

Lagers are bottom-fermented and brewed at lower temperatures. They are typically easy drinking, light in body and mild in taste, with a clean flavor and crispy finish.
